Cucamonga Creek

Cucamonga Creek

Nature in your own backyard

Above Rancho Cucamonga, where the sprawling development of Southern California comes to a halt leaving a glimpse of what was here before, there is a shallow creek of cold, clear mountain water that lures local residents to its edge.

A dusty trail at the end of Sapphire Street, north of 19th Street, leads to Cucamonga Creek. Here, surrounded by sage brush and isolated by nature, a glance over one's shoulder reveals a dense smog covering over the populated valley below.

This is the easy part of the ½ mile walk to the creek. Just as the valley below can no longer be seen, the trail becomes a steep path of loose shale that slides under one's feet.

But what proves the most harrowing part of the trail, especially for those who are afraid of heights and who are not so sure-footed, is yet to come.

At the point where one can hear the creek's rushing water, one must walk along a cliff, on a path varying in width from a few feet to six inches. The drops below are not the worst in the canyon, only 20 to 50 feet, but hard falls nonetheless. Meandering further below is the creek.

Creating a sonorous symphony, rushing water cascades down a staircase of boulders and rocks that jigjagg its course. The dense bushes and tall weeds that nestle right up to the water's edge are rich in flying critters that bite, such as large black flies and tiny mosquitos.

Despite the bugs and the cliffs, the people come. Some come to fish, some to hike, others to shoot despite its prohibition. Their stays are evidenced by strewn beer cans, the remains of a bonfire, bullet-riddled cans and shell casings, and stolen cars that have been torched and pushed over from high cliffs above.

"Everything in the world goes on up there, good and bad," said Bob Corcoran, acting division chief of the Foothill Fire District. Bodies have been dumped there, stolen cars are rolled over cliffs, but the biggest misuse of the area is by adolescents who go up there and "party," he said.

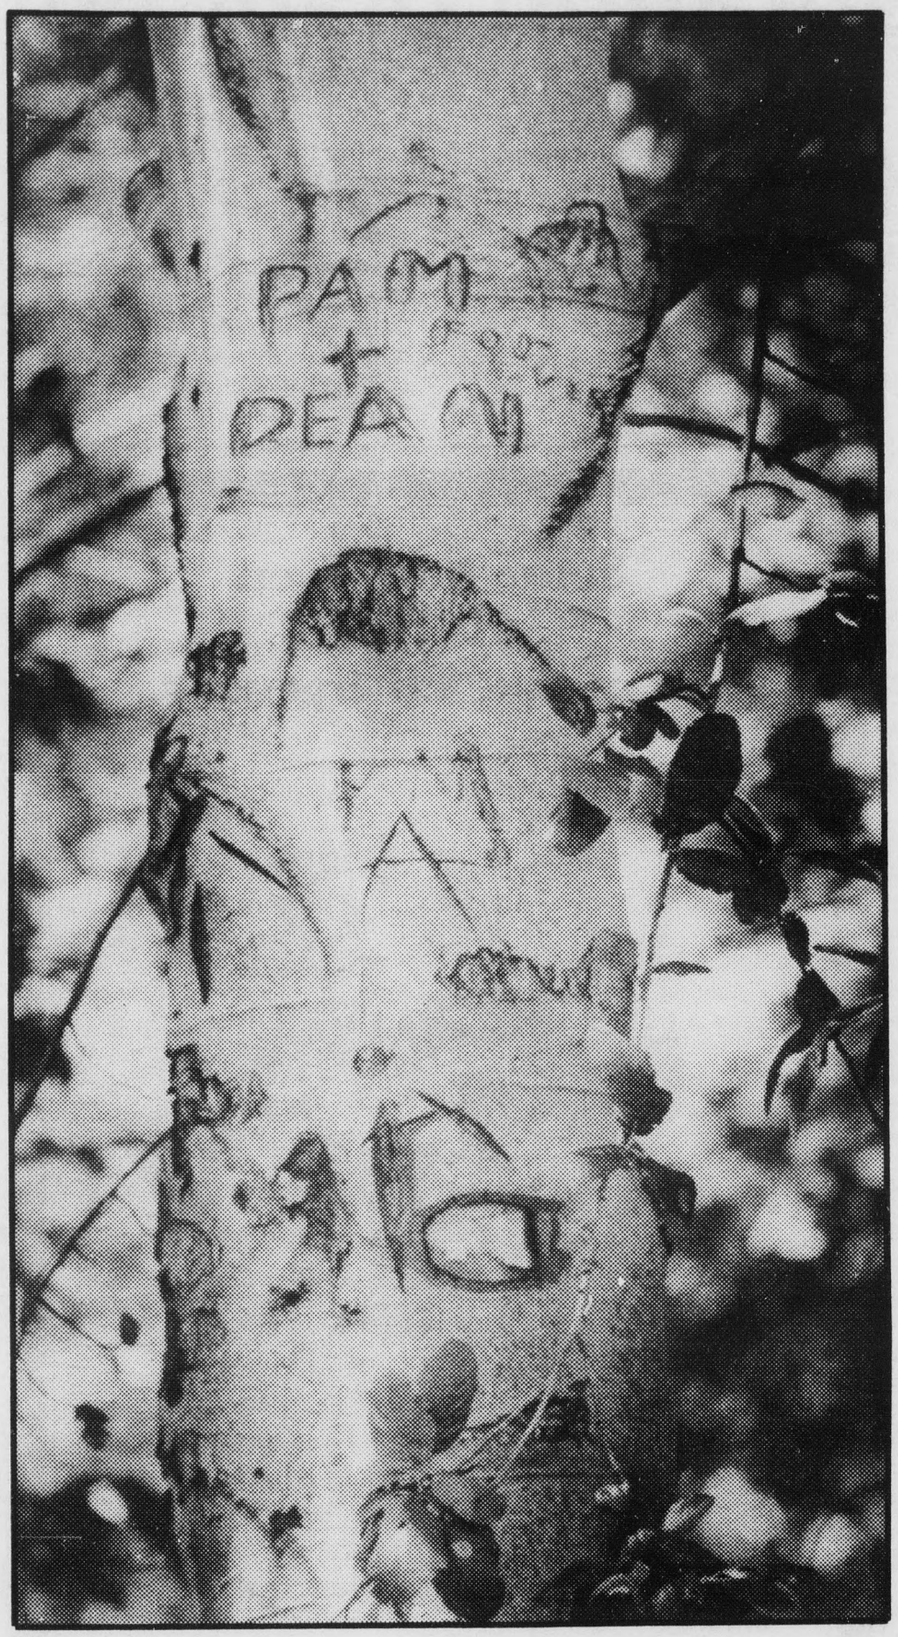

"At night there'll be 50 kids up there. It's gotten worse in the last five years or so but it's always been a problem for us," he said.

"What happens is we get kids going up there and they party and get drunk ... and end up endangering themselves," according to Deputy Donald Coins of the West End Sheriff's Station. The station's search and rescue team receives many calls to rescue an individual or a car that has gone over a cliff, he added.

There have been a considerable number of falling deaths up there in recent years, Corcoran added. "All the time, it's amazing the frequency. It's really a bad deal up there at night."

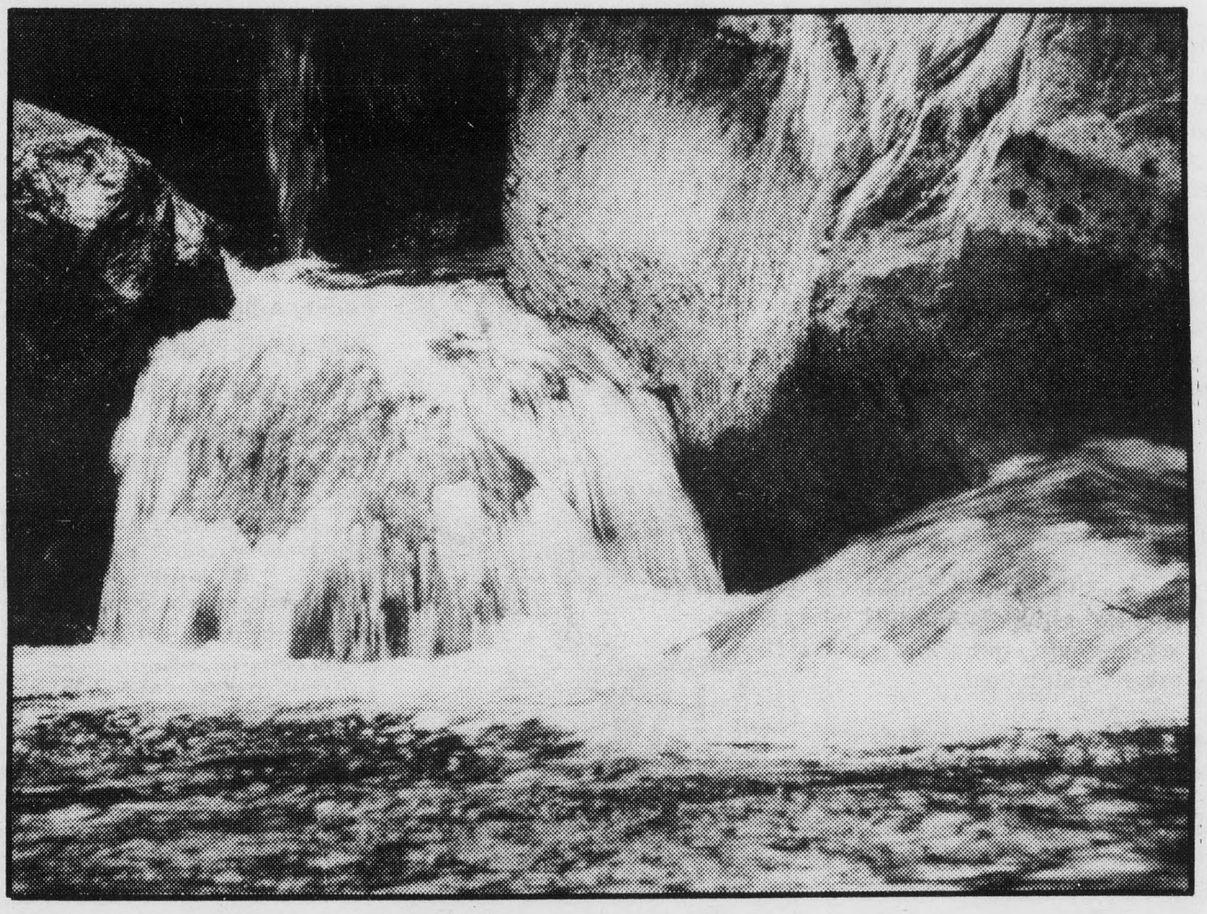

But "it can be real nice," he said. The safety of the area depends on "what your interpretation of safe is and what times you go up there," he added.

Story by Karen Pyke Photos by Eric Vilchis

Nearby Cucamonga Creek provides a water, wooded getaway for the West End suburbanite. The creek also serves as an isolated spot for adolescents to "party," according to local officials. Getting to the creek is not real easy,however, and there have been many injuries and deaths as a result of falls from cliffs in the area. Many visitors to the creek leave something behind, like their initials carved on trees or beer cans.

July 4th fund-raising celebration planned

The annual 4th of July celebration at Chaffey Community College is not only a fund-raiser for the extended college but also a way to create a sense of community among city residents and give them a safe alternative to lighting their own fireworks, Ginger Eaton said.

According to Eaton, director of the Rex. W. Wignall Museum and Gallery, which is part of the extended college, the Independence Day celebration is intended "to encourage a sense of community with the college as the focal point. There are people who are very close who have never been on this campus. And it's a beautiful campus," she said.

Since 1978 and the passage of Proposition 13, the extended college has been on its own financially. Given five years to become self-supporting, extended college staff devised an annual July 4 celebration to raise funds for their coffers.

The extended college's only fund-raiser began three years ago with barely more than a brief show of fireworks. But the event's planners promise that this year's celebration will be much closer to the spectacular event they had given themselves until 1987 to accomplish.

"Every year it's getting bigger. Every year we've been able to give the community more for the same price," Eaton said.

An all-day family picnic with carnival games and rides will be in the middle of campus. Swimming in the college pool will cost $1 for the entire day.

After the carnival rides close down at 6:30 p.m., picnickers can head toward the stadium for a few hours of blue grass music by The High Window Boys at 7 p.m. followed by a hot air balloon exhibit. A half hour of fireworks by Pyro-spectaculars, the same company that makes the fireworks at Disneyland, will top the evening off at dusk.

"It's nice to have a place to come for that old-fashioned patriotic 4th of July," Eaton said.

The $5 admission to the stadium, with children under 6 free, will pay for expenses and, event planners hope, leave something left over for the extended college.

So far, that hasn't been the case. Last year the extended college lost money on the event and made only a small profit the year before. They had given themselves five years to make the celebration profitable, Eaton said.

Most of the extended college's $300,000 annual budget is raised through class fees. Classes were free prior to 1978, when the extended college was financed from the district budget.

Last year was the first self-supporting year for the extended college, said administrative assistant Barbara Cherbak. It offers over 300 classes and workshops a year, as well as local and European tours and children's programs including the children's enrichment school.

Cherbak doesn't anticipate that this year's 4th of July celebration, while bigger than last year's, will be another financial loss to the college. "We've ironed out some of the problems we had last year," she said. Primarily that means that there will be better crowd control this year to prevent spectators from sneaking on campus without paying, she said.

For advance tickets, which event planners recommend for preferred parking and as tickets may sell out, call the extended college office at 987-1737, ext. 246.

Outstanding employees honored at ceremony

By Terri Tirella

Alta Loma School District celebrated its 100 years of service with a special ceremony honoring outstanding employees recently.

"We always have a special dinner for retirements," said John McMurtry, superintendent, "But since this was our 100th anniversary we decided to have an employee recognition dinner."

The school district, which held its first class for two weeks at a family residence in 1885, honored 28 employees from its seven schools and support service personnel June 17.

District employees were nominated from each school site and other departments, McMurtry said. "We didn't single out any group, people from every classification were honored."

Each school site nominated a specified number of employees, depending upon the number of personnel working in that school or department.

"The intention was not to recognize the person who just did a good job, but those who took the step beyond the norm; the custodian who brought flowers to all the classrooms or stopped his work to tie a child's shoelace," he said.

The district has grown from an original 24 students to its current enrollment of 5,052 students. McMurtry said he has seen 66 percent growth in the district since he took on the duties of superintendent after Floyd Stork, the former superintendent asked for reassignment in 1978.

"We've opened three new elementary schools and completed the second half of the junior high," he said.

In the district's 100 years, it has had only two superintendents, McMurtry and Stork. "The district hired its first superintendent in 1953," McMurty said. Districts had to have more than eight employees before the hiring of a superintendent was required, according to the county codes.

Other staff members honored were: Helen Knuttel, Diane LaFrenz, Judy Suter, La Vona Kwinn, Sharon Garrett, Alta Loma Junior High; Mitzi Dyer, Ken Hancock, Mary Ann Uribe, Carnelian Elementary School; Janet Henopp, transportation department; John Gill, maintenance; Sylvia Minet, food services; and Liz Brandt, district office.

'Concerts in the Park' series set at Vineyard Park

The third annual "Concerts in the Park" series will begin Thursday, July 11 at 6 p.m., at Vineyard Park, 7291 Vineyard Ave. in Rancho Cucamonga.

The Performing Arts of Rancho Cucamonga Council (PARC) will co-sponsor the free concert series with the city of Rancho Cucamonga Community Services Department.

"We try to have different types of music for everyone. It's not just all rock 'n' roll or old-time music," said Don Hardy, board member of the PARC organization.

The annual series will feature local talent as well as other groups in the eight evening performances. Pianned for this year's concerts are The Hot Pecans, Dale O'Neil Canyon Band Express, The Spot Lighters, March Air Force Band, the Mens' Barber Shop Quartet, and the Bonner Family.

"Families can fry some chicken, bring out their blankets and bring their children and relax," he said.

The concerts end at about 7:30 p.m. so residents who live nearby can walk home during daylight hours.

Jim Bonner, another PARC member, coordinates the entertainment for the series. He and his family will perform on July 18.

Neighbors in the news

Kirk Kushin, a junior at Etiwanda High School, is among 150 California high school students selected to participate in the eighth Annual Southern California Youth Citizenship Seminar at Pepperdine University's Malibu campus.

Youth seminar participants were nominated by their high school principals on the basis of their active involvement in school and community services. Students are expected to rank in the upper 25 percentile at their respective high schools.

Funded by concerned business leaders, the seminar is aimed at inspiring new and greater interest for American democracy among today's youth. Through seminars, films, and workshops on economic, education, the four-day program seeks to challenge student leaders to take an active role in society as educated citizens.

Magnolia students given awards from the president

By Suzanne Sproul

First there was the president's physical fitness awards initiated by John Kennedy. Now President Reagan has begun another series of awards designed to recognize academic achievement.

Fifteen Magnolia School students in Upland have received personal congratulations from Reagan in the form of academic certificates for their hard work in school. All are sixth graders.

Award requirements state that an elementary student must have a B plus average throughout his time in school and received a score in the 80th percentile on any nationally recognized achievement test.

"I think it's wonderful for the president and the Department of Education to recognize the good things these kids are doing in school. I'm proud of them," Principal Roberta Hennigan said.

Magnolia will participate in the program again next year, she said.

The presidential award is designed to motivate students to strive to do their best academically, said the Secretary of Education Theo Bell in award literature.

"Through our children we will see today's dream become tomorrow's reality. As a nation, we must encourage our young people to reach their full academic potential by recognizing their achievements and devotion to the pursuit of learning," said Reagan in the same literature.

Science Foundation awards given

The National Science Foundation has awarded more than $24,000 to two Cal State, San Bernardino faculty members to upgrade student curriculum in their respective fields.

Dr. Theodore R. McDowell, Lake Arrowhead, an assistant professor of geography, will use $18,200 to purchase up-to-date instruments and equipment for classroom instruction and student projects in remote sensing, cartography and environmental studies which will be useful in interpreting aerial photography, image transfer, graphics and spatial analysis.

Dr. Russell J. Barber, San Bernardino, an assistant professor of anthropology, received $5,800 in materials to support laboratory and field research by students in the archaeology program. The equipment will include stereo viewers, microscopes, photographic and surveying instruments which will be useful in mapping and surveying sites, studying aerial photographs and identifying archaeological remains.

The grants are among the first of this type to be awarded to the university. They will be matched by university funds set up for this purpose.

Panel rejects Carden Arbor plan

Carden Arbor View School's request for a master plan review has been rejected by the Upland Planning Commission because of the lack of specific information.

The private school, with grades kindergarten through eight, is seeking a master plan review from the city allowing a maximum enrollment of 225 students.

School administrators also want city approval for one-story modular buildings to be made permanent.

The city requires master plans to allow for a harmonious blend of buildings in an area. The school, located at 1510 N. San Antonio Ave., is located in a primarily residential area.

The planning commission and staff require that a comprehensive site plan be submitted and approved to ensure that the school will be developed in compliance with city standards.

The city wants the plan presented and approved before classes begin in September.

Jeff Bloom, contract planner for the city, said the commission has asked the school to have the required plan ready for its July 25 meeting.

The city council, in February, denied a school request to allow expansion to 280 students.

Councilman Frank Carpenter, at that time, said the school no longer was appropriate for a residential area and would be best suited elsewhere.

School administrators and residents in the area have clashed at previous meetings.

Upland may drop landscape districts

Upland's six landscape maintenance districts may be eliminated because they could present an unfair burden on a minority of residents, city officials have said.

The $8,000 cost of six landscape maintenance districts may be absorbed by the city instead of the 209 homeowners now picking up the tab. One councilman, though, said he may propose having developers help with the costs.

Councilman Bob Nolan said many of the areas involved in the districts were created because of irregularly shaped parcels resulting from development tracts. In one case, the property in a district is only nine four-feet wide sections where trees are planted.

But homeowners will be assessed $22.40 each for maintaining those parcels.

Nolan said he would like to see developers contribute to a fund which could be used to finance maintenance costs.

"I'm only speaking for myself, though," he said. "It's only about $7,000. Why upset people by taxing them when maybe the city or developers should be paying for it?"

The city is studying the feasibility of eliminating six landscape maintenance districts which cost homeowners in particular areas almost $8,000 a year.

The districts were created in 1978 after Prop. 13 when city officials feared the loss of needed money for municipal services. The council, though, now wants to take a second look at the effectiveness and need for such districts.

Mayor Richard Anderson and other council members say the districts are ongoing problems representing an unfair burden on some. Anderson said inequities result when all residents enjoy the aesthetic benefits of many of the properties but only a few are being charged for them.

He has suggested asking the Mayor's Advisory Committee to begin studying the matter. If the advisory committee doesn't study the change, the city's street and light committee will.

"I think it is a question of realigning priorities. The city doesn't have any more available funds but if the city did eliminate the districts the expense would probably come out of the general fund," Anderson said.

Women's club to host brunch

The Rancho Cucamonga Christian Women's Club will hold a "You take the Cake" brunch on Wednesday, from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. at the Red Lion Inn, 222 N. Vineyard, Ontario.

Guest vocalist will be Gina Miner and guest speaker for the brunch will be Melodie Standford who will speak about the "Icing on the Cake."

Reservations are essential and can be made by calling 980-1272, 947-3226 or 983-2830. Free child care is available with reservation.

Christian Women's Club is an inter-denominational organization with no dues. All women are invited to join.

Golf tourney set

The Rancho Cucamonga VIP Club will sponsor their first Senior Golf Tournament on Wednesday, beginning at 8 a.m. All West Valley seniors, both men and women, are invited to participate.

The event will be co-sponsored by the Rancho Cucamonga Community Service Department. Prizes will be awarded.

For more information, and reservations, call Kevin Evans, 980-2634; or stop by the Rancho Cucamonga Neighborhood Center, 9791 Arrow Highway.

Deputies target two R.C. streets

Rancho Cucamonga Sheriff deputies will concentrate traffic enforcement on both Base Line Road and Archibald Avenue this week.

Deputies will issue citations to motorists who violate the right-of-way and speed limit laws.

The sheriff deputies want to remind pedestrians that walkers can be cited for violating traffic laws, including failure to yield to a motortists when crossing outside of a crosswalk, starting to cross the street after the "Don't Walk" sign has started flashing, hitchhiking in the street and jaywalking.

Summer course now offered in debate, speech

A Summer Debate and Speech Institute will be offered to area high school students at Cal State, San Bernardino July 15-19.

This forensics institute is designed to help high school students prepare for interscholastic competition in Lincoln-Douglas Debate and/or selected individual speaking events.

Program times vary according to the topics of instruction selected. A special warm-up tournament will be held on the final day with awards presented to finalists in both debate and the various individual events.

How to live with death of a loved one

By Rev. Lee Truman
Copley News Service

A friend told me what had happened a few weeks after the death of her mother.

"I thought I was getting along just fine," she said. "Mom's death had been a terrible shock. Of course I thought I was prepared for it, and I faced it as a Christian. Family and friends came and went, and I received a stack of cards and letters from those who knew Mom but could not come to the funeral.

"Then it happened. I was alone, and the realization hit me like a physical blow that I would not hear my mother's voice again, talk to her about the children or ever share again the things we loved. This was the end, and it hurt so much I felt actually ill."

My friend is a mature, sensitive mother — used to making decisions and using her own initiative. Now there was this stabbing loneliness, in spite of being happily married, having a fine home that she enjoyed and having a number of close friends. The loneliness is painfully real.

This is a situation that we all face in some form. Yet when it happens, it is as if something of ourselves has gone. It seems as if life can never be the same again, and we are right. But life can be renewed and rebuilt in a different way without being morbid or lonely.

The test comes not really at the funeral or with the presence of sympathetic friends. It comes when we know what it is to be alone. It comes at the moment when there was a time of sharing and there is no one with whom to share that special item. Instead, we face the emptiest moments we have ever known.

The first step is to let grief have its release. There is absolutely nothing wrong with crying. The idea that it is not manly or that a strong person, or a person of deep faith, does not give way to grief has done great harm to good people.

Wait, and let the world stop reeling. No drastic change should take place for six months. Formulate your decisions calmly and after careful thought.

Whatever you do, just because you feel painfully alone, do not rush to fill the void.

While grief should be expressed, do not indulge yourself in self-pity. This is morbid. Grief is not.

There is a very positive answer to the person who in anguish is wringing his hands and says: "What have I to live for now?"

There are bigger considerations that deep sorrow cannot see. There are needs to be met that you alone can meet. There is work, fulfillment, contribution and service that you alone can give.

Feelings of remorse, self-incrimination and guilt are not to be indulged in. All of us are tempted to stab ourselves with sharp remembrances of unkind acts, thoughtlessness or busy indifference. When such thoughts come like knives in your conscience, learn from them and let your past mistakes make you more understanding, thoughtful and considerate toward those who are with you now.

Life never stands still. We have to go forward with it. I know tragically sad people who have kept "his" room just like it was, as a "shrine." Furniture, articles and clothes are cherished like sacred fetishes.

Dr. J.S. Bonnell tells how Madame Curie fell into this in her grief. When her husband, Pierre, was killed in an accident she kept his blood-stained clothes, taking them out, fondling them, kissing them, until her sister took them out and burned them.

The way for you and the way your loved one would have you live is to move ahead with life.

The last bit of advice is to avoid hiding. Mixing naturally with other people is hard.

"A recluse," some wise person has noted, "is not a hero." In short, you must not run away.

Take your courage in both hands, and with all of your faith, hope and love, make a new life for yourself.

DIALING FOR DOLLARS ?

New water tanker one of largest in county

She is wider than a hippopotumus, holds more water than a camel, and sprays the liquid further than an elephant and firefighters in Rancho Cucamonga will be using her in the grassy areas on the eastside.

"She" is a water truck capable of holding 4,000 gallons that is the latest acquisition of the Foothill Fire Protection District.

The truck was built by a Rancho Cucamonga company to be stationed in the city's eastside where it will aid firemen in fighting brush fires in areas where there are no fire hydrants, according to Chief L. Dennis Michael.

Michael said the truck is the largest tanker in the West Valley and one of the largest in the county.

"What basically it will allow us to do is we'll be able to spend more time in active fire fighting without having to return to a fire hydrant to refill," Michael said.

The district's only other truck has 1,500 gallons capacity.

Members of the district's board of directors approved the $62,998 expenditure in June 1983. The district located the chassis of a rock-quarry dump truck in the Midwest, had the chassis shipped to Rancho Cucamonga and had B. and T. Water Truck Manufacturing Co. build the water tank and install it.

The Rancho Cucamonga company normally builds water trucks for construction companies but had built a truck for the California Department of Forestry prior to receiving the Foothill order.

Having the truck built locally gave the fire district flexibility in changing the design and reduced the cost of the work.

Presently all of the firefighters at the station on Base Line Road are training with the vehicle.

R.C. council adopts investment policy

The Rancho Cucamonga City Council has adopted a formal investment policy aimed at avoiding problems that have occurred in other cities such as San Jose, where $60 million in city investments were lost in speculative ventures.

Because the San Jose incident resulted in state legislation requiring cities to adopt formal investment policies, other West Valley cities including Montclair and Ontario have also adopted such policies.

The Rancho Cucamonga City Council adopted its policy Thursday and like some other area cities, the policy will take effect with the start of the new fiscal year today, according to City Treasurer James C. Frost.

Rancho Cucamonga has approximately $12 million in "idle cash" invested and most of the restrictions and guidelines newly adopted by the city council have been put into practice in the past, Frost said.

The idea is to avoid putting money into unsecured investments or long-term investments that can be affected by a fall in the market, according to Ned Crutcher, the assistant finance director for the city of Montclair. Montclair's city council adopted a formal investement policy in February, as did the Ontario council.

Most cities found the model for their policies in a policy developed by the California Municipal Treasurers Association, according to Frost.

The Rancho Cucamonga policy, like those in Monclair and Ontario, sets protection of the principal as the most important criteria for investment. Liquidity is also a priority, he said.

Frost has been practicing that policy for some time. Most of the city's investments are in short term, certificates of deposit, which currently are earning 8 percent interest.

Short term is six months or less, he said.

Ontario's finance director, Sam Norris, said his city also invests in money market accounts of a year or less.

Rancho Cucamonga may also participate in a state program called the Local Agency Investment Fund, in which the state pools cities money and invests it for them, Frost said.

Each city's formal investment policy is required to be reviewed and considered for revision at least once a year, he said.

Several cities across the country, who are either adopting a new investment policy or reviewing an old policy, have sought to partially or wholly divest their assets from companies that do business with the government of South Africa, because of the country's system of aparthied.

Frost said discussion of divestment requirements has taken place in the state legislature but nothing has come of it.

He said Rancho Cucamonga, like most cities, are not divesting of companies that do business in South Africa.

"Almost every major company in the U.S. has had some dealing with South Africa," he said.

If cities adopted a policy pledging divestment, it would be difficult to find investments because companies like IBM and Bank of America have ties to South Africa.

"The theory and the ethics can't be disputed but the practicality just isn't there," he said.

Ontario does not invest in company stock, Norris said.

"We have not addressed the issue (divestment) because most of ours is in savings and loans and local banks," he said.

Upland fire chief vacancy draws 35 applicants

Upland's vacant fire chief position has captured the interests of applicants from throughout the country.

After advertising in trade journals and various municipalities' circulars, the Upland personnel department has received about 35 applications for the position.

Currently the department is screening applications hoping to bring the number down to about nine, according to Personnel Director Mary Ann Reiss.

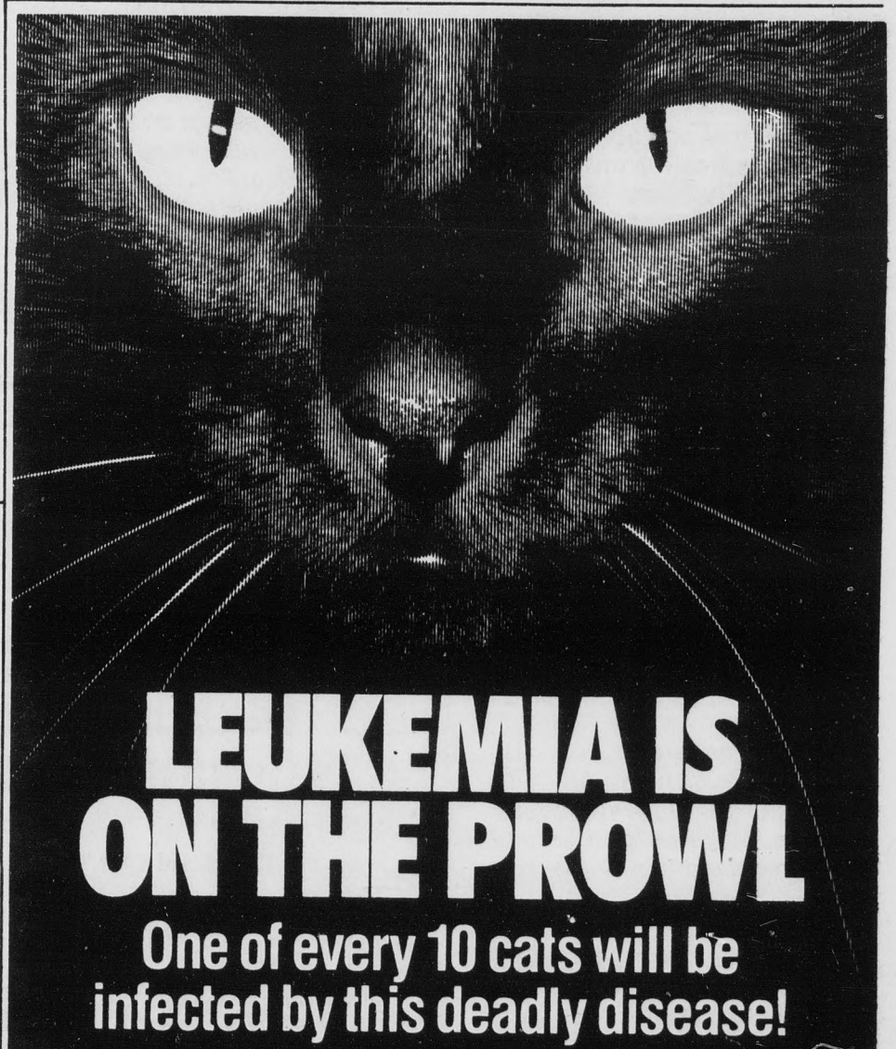

Reiss said a specially appointed interview board will consider the applicants possibly in mid-July. "We would like to have the position filled by Aug. 1," she said.

Reiss declined to name the board members. When the interviews begin, they will be conducted at City Hall.

The position became vacant in May when Fire Chief Don Justis announced his intention to retire.

Gary Edwards, division chief for the fire prevention bureau, was appointed acting chief until a replacement could be found.

Cognac-style brandy from California

By Dan Berger
Copley News Service

Brandy (or cognac, made in the French district of that name) is only one distilled beverage that has a kinship with wine. It is a product that is similar to wine because it is made from the same raw material — grapes — that wine is made from.

Moreover, its main attributes — elegant aroma and silky, rich taste — are similar to wine's attributes.

It was for some of those reasons that Jack and Jamie Davies began importing a special cognac from France some years ago. It was called Eclipse and the name of the maker was a closely guarded secret.

The Davies are owners of Schramsberg, the Napa Valley producer of one of the top lines of sparkling wines in California, and their interest in cognac stems from the fact that cognac is used as a topping element in fine champagne.

Over the years, it was clear to the Davies that buying cognac from France was the only way to get fine-quality brandy. The methods used in cognac were not often used to produce brandy in the United States.

Now Schramsberg and Remy Martin, the great cognac producer, have joined forces to make and market a cognac-style brandy from California, using California grapes and French expertise.

Actually, the joint project called RMS (for Remy Martin-Schramsberg) was formed some years ago. At the time, the announcement was met with a lukewarm response because at least three years would have to pass before the first product would be released. Now release is at hand, this summer. The product is called RMS California Brandy, and it sells for $18 a bottle.

The idea was to make a brandy in a unique style, not like cognac, but also unlike previous California brandies. That made this project different from those who attempted to emulate cognac in the past.

One reason the project has succeeded is because of the enormous amount of money — many millions of dollars — put into this project.

Remy Martin is a French company, and there are rigid restrictions on the use of money in France. The French government has limited the amount of money that may be taken out of the country, and thus Remy Martin felt it needed a way to invest some of its overseas-made money in a place other than France.

RMS became the vehicle. It is a joint venture of Schramsberg and Remy Martin-Far East, with the funds coming from profits made by the French firm's Far East operations.

The project starts with the expensive, time-consuming copper-pot stills that slowly distill fermented grape juice, reducing its essence into a pure, concentrated form. The resulting distillate is aged in new Limousin oak barrels for three years, then blended with minute quantities of varying vintages of brandy made the same way.

I have tasted RMS, and found that, unlike some California brandies, it does not have a sweetened taste. It is smooth and soft on the palate, and has a heady and youthful aroma. The overall sensation is complex — a fine first effort.

Last year at the Napa Valley Wine Auction, the first case of this wine was sold for $21,000 to Gerrett and Tatiana Copeland, wine collectors from Delaware. RMS clearly never intended for this product to sell for that kind of money, but was happy to get the publicity it generated.

Now the product has to live up to that billing, and fortunately the product is excellent. And instead of paying $1,750 per bottle for it, we can get it for $18.

Comedienne's big heroine was 'Honeymooners' Alice Kramden

By Don Freeman
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Mary Frann is very good-looking and she's very funny which, not too coincidentally, is an apt description of Audrey Meadows. Everybody knows that Audrey Meadows was terrific as co-star to Jackie Gleason and Art Carney in "The Honeymooners." She was Alice Kramden, wife of Ralph the bus driver — played by Gleason, of course.

Mostly, as a foil to the comedy actors, Audrey played straight to the others and there's a tendency to overlook the brilliance of her performance. Mary Frann doesn't overlook anything about Audrey Meadows. Mary Frann thinks that Audrey Meadows really hung the moon.

I had asked Mary how her own style of comedy had developed and she said: "Starting out in the business, I had some people I particularly liked — Mary Tyler Moore was one, the early Lucille Ball was another. But my big heroine was Audrey Meadows in 'The Honeymooners.'"

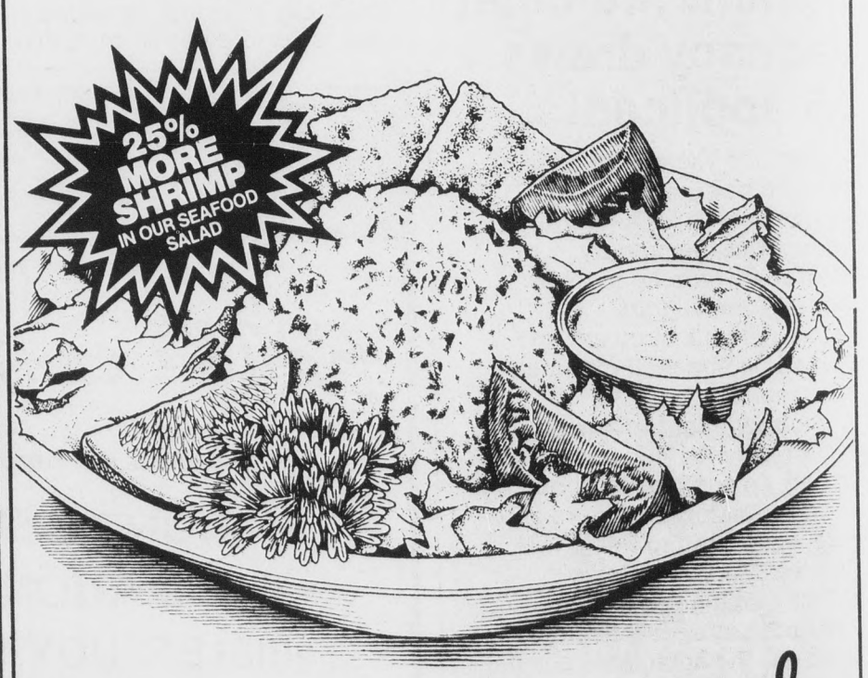

Well, hearing Mary say this opened my eyes, too, and I thought of "The Honeymooners" in a different light. Audrey Meadows!

"The thing about Audrey Meadows in that show is, she held her own with two very strong guys doing funny things around her," Mary Frann is saying. "Audrey always walked a terribly fine line. She could face up to Ralph Kramden and tell him off, and still you never doubted the depth of Alice's love for him. As furious as she would get with Ralph, she was never mean-spirited or petty. And — this is so important — she was strong enough so that when Ralph would holler at her, 'Alice, how'd you like a trip to the moon!' you knew it was all bluster and he never seemed like a bully. Audrey Meadows made Jackie Gleason funnier!"

"Do you know her?" I asked.

"No, but some day I'd love to meet her," Mary said. "I'd tell Audrey Meadows that she is the prima comedienne."

And now Mary Frann, in common with Audrey Meadows in another era, is portraying the wife opposite another strong and funny man, Bob Newhart, in the CBS comedy series, "Newhart." But some years before, as a kid out of St. Louis, Mary won the Junior Miss Pageant. And so on June 21 she joined Bruce Jenner as co-host of this year's Junior Miss Pageant in Mobile, Ala.

Maybe it's her way of paying back the pageant, which is in its 28th year, for helping her move up on the educational ladder in an exceptional way. Winning the Junior Miss Pageant got her a scholarship to attend that flower of arcane intellect which blossoms, as did the Aristotelian Lyceum in the Athens of old, on the verdant campus stretched out along the shores of Lake Michigan — Northwestern University.

"There were four kids in the family and I was the oldest and there wasn't all that much money to think about college," Mary says. "So I entered the Junior Miss and won it and the doors opened."

She could have gone anywhere but she chose Northwestern's storied School of Speech and Drama.

Anyway, Mary Frann went to Northwestern and, as she says, going to school in Evanston, Ill., she learned a few things.

"I learned what it's like having a class at 8 in the morning in the middle of January when the lake is frozen and icicles hang from the trees and you trundle to class through the sleet and the snow. With one hand you hold your books, with the other hand you are trying to protect your face from the harsh wind off the lake that would like nothing better than to bite your nose off."

But, she says: "I also learned how to be a professional."

She acted in campus dramas, and she sang and danced in the annual WAA-MU show. And then for further seasoning she went on to Yale Drama School and after that she did some Broadway and she became co-host of a TV talk show in Chicago. By 1968 she had ventured out to Hollywood. In time she was guest-starring on episodic TV and she was a regular on the "King's Crossing" series.

She was one of five final candidates for the role of Bob Newhart's wife in a new series wherein he played a writer who also runs a New England country inn. "They had a tryout reading in a rehearsal hall that was big enough for the Rockettes to dance in," she says. "As I walked in, right in front of all those people from the network, I tripped and fell. Instant humiliation! I figured, goodbye job, hello unemployment. But an hour after I got home the director called. The part was mine. I was overjoyed."

As most people remember, Bob's wife in a previous Newhart series was played by Suzanne Pleshette and her name was Emily.

In the first year of the current series, they were filming an episode before a studio audience. "It was getting late and we were all a bit tired," Mary says. "Now for this scene I was wearing a sexy black nightgown. And Bob is saying lines from the script and inadvertently he called me 'Emily.' Oops!

"I turned to the studio audience and said, 'I ask you, if you were the second wife and wearing a sexy black nightgown, what would you do?' Well, of course everybody laughed, Bob most of all."

Employees face bans on city cars

Upland City Council members recently approved an ordinance prohibiting the personal use of city-owned vehicles by authorized employees.

City Manager Lee Travers said the move simply involved putting a long-time policy in writing.

The council also approved a resolution to decrease the mileage reimbursement allowed employees for using their private cars.

To date the city has reimbursed its employees 30 cents per mile for using their vehicles on city business. Council members said the amount was excessive and decreased it to 20½ cents per mile. The change became effective July 1.

The council also discussed the following:

- Travers reported that despite record scorching temperatures, the city's water department hasn't had any trouble supplying water to customers.
- Councilman Bob Nolan, reporting for the city's street and light committee, said Upland is considering creating 40 additional parking spaces near City Hall. The plan also includes making First Avenue a two-way street.

The overall cost of the project is expected to be about $100,000. The council approved a $3,500 expenditure for a project engineering study.

R.C. woman forgotten by computer

By Karen Pyke
Staff Writer

Collection agencies may soon be knocking at Evelyn Maxwell's Rancho Cucamonga door demanding payment of medical bills that Medicare hasn't paid.

The 56-year-old disabled woman became eligible for Medicare in September, 1984, but a computer error has not allowed one penney from paying her medical bills.

Lora Mannie, a representative of Medicare, explained that the social security computer in Baltimore repeatedly tells the Chico Medicare office that Maxwell's eligibility is being investigated.

"How could they be figuring out my eligibility when I drew social security disability for two years before I became eligible for Medicare? The only criteria is that you have to be on social security disability for 24 months prior and (Medicare) comes automatically," Maxwell said.

Furthermore, she said, she received notice of her eligiblity prior to September, 1984. And every month $15 for Medicare is taken out of her $310 social security check.

Maxwell, who became disabled from back and neck injuries sustained in a car accident in March 1982, has more than $1,000 in outstanding medical bills for emergency treatment. Most of those bills are owed to San Antonio Community Hospital in Upland, which will no longer admit her for medical treatment until the bills are paid, she said. The hospital has turned over some of those bills to a collection agency, she added.

As soon as her eligibility is determined, Maxwell plans to go to Loma Linda Hospital for treatment to alleviate the pain she has in her back and neck.

That should be soon, according to Mannie. "Supposedly by the end of the month, everything should be find," she said, adding that social security must respond by 70 days but usually resolves such problems within 30 days.

But Maxwell has been told that before and is skeptical. "If they hadn't told me this before, I'd believe them. I'm beginning to become a doubting Thomas. I'll believe it when I see it," Maxwell said.

"It's a complete standstill," she said. "There's no excuse for this."

Maxwell added that when she gets her Medicre, she would also like to seek counseling to help her deal with the loss of her 17-year-old grandson, who committed suicide in April. Things haven't been easy for her, she added. Her 18-year-old son, Mike, died from a fall in 1982 and another son, Larry, died of a liver disease at the age of 32 in 1983.

Things just have to get better, she said, looking back on the past.

A computer error is stopping Medicare from paying Evelyn Maxwell's medical bills and the disabled 56-year-old womancannot receive further medical treatment until her bills are paid.

Park fees gain support from R.C. advisory commission

With a new citizens group about to launch a challenge to parks assessments in Rancho Cucamonga, the city's Community Advisory Commission reaffirmed its support last week for the fees.

The commission voted support for the city council's May 17 action approving an assessment district to build two new city parks.

The action was taken last Thursday because of the emergence of a citizens group in Alta Loma that is planning to challenge the assessment district in court and on the ballot.

"I felt it was necessary because there have been a lot of letters to the editor lately opposing it and none for it," said Commissioner Bruce Ann Hahn. "I feel that in order to get the parks we're going to have to pay for them."

Of the 12 commissioners present, all but one, Jefferson Hill Sr., voted for the resolution of support.

Hill abstained saying, "I'm not sure if this (assessment) is the only method."

A group of 15 Alta Loma residents announced last week that they are forming Cucamonga Citizens Coalition — Fighting Abusive Taxation to challenge the assessment district for the construction of Red Hill Community Park and Heritage Park.

The group's organizers, Herman and Maxine Smith, said they feared the average $34.65 annual assessment on single-family residential lots is only the first of other taxes.

The Smiths also believe the assessments circumvent Prop. 13 which required new taxes to be approved by the voters.

Hahn said the advisory commission supported the council's action on the assessment district before the action was taken and should reaffirm its support now.

Special care needed when school's out

Without classes to attend during the summer months, more than 20 million American children will be looking for warm-weather fun, according to the National Safety Council.

Once school ends and there are more daylight hours, youngsters tend to play outdoors more, according to Janice Sutkus, child safety specialist at the council. For many of these kids, streets and roadways are perceived as interesting places to play and explore, she added.

Unfortunately, more than 1,500 children are killed in motor vehicle-pedistrian accidents every year, according to council statistics.

"It's up to parents and teachers to instruct children not to play in the streets," said Sutkus. "But it is equally important for motorists to be aware of pedistrians and ready to take action to avoid a collision."

Most motor vehicle-pedistrian fatalities occur when a child dashes from between parked cars into the street in the middle of the block, Sutkus said, urging motorists to be on the lookout for kids along the roadside as well as at crosswalks.

Sutkus recommends that parents begin teaching the children pedestrian safety as soon as a child is allowed to go outdoors. There are right and wrong ways to cross a street. Sutkus suggests parents teach their children the following:

- Children always should stop at the curb or at the outside edge of a parked car before crossing. Look left, then right, then left again before entering the road at midblock. At intersections look all ways and watch out for cars turning right on red.
- If a child sees a car coming, the youngster should wait until it passes and then look again.
- Children should take their time while crossing a street.

COINS

By Gary L. Palmer
Copley News Service

Looking to wile away these lazy summer days with a good book?

For numismatists who want to brush up on the historical, a good read is "Striking Impressions."

If investment fodder is your cup of tea, you might want to sit down with "Donald Kagin's Personal Guide to Rare Coin Investments."

Taking the historical tome first, James A. Haxby, currency historian and numismatic consultant, brings Canada's turbulent colonial beginnings alive in "Striking Impressions," as he traces that country's coinage from the early, pre-mint days through 1983, the 75th anniversary of the Royal Canadian Mint.

It took severe coin shortages and more than 250 years of heated debate before the leaders of Canada made the decision in 1900 to establish the nation's mint.

Today that mint, a Canadian Government Crown Corp., is one of the largest and most versatile mints in the world and has gained a worldwide reputation for advanced technology and quality craftsmanship, producing the internationally traded Gold Maple Leaf coin, the currency of Canada, international circulating and numismatic coins, and coin blanks.

Readers will find themselves transported, through text and full-color illustrations, back to the days of the Klondike gold rush, when Canada was in desperate need of its own gold refinery.

Haxby has the background to write knowledgeably about his topic. His interest came first as a private collector, then as deputy curator of Canada's National Currency Collection at the Bank of Canada in Ottawa. He has authored numerous hobby articles and several books on Canadian banks and bank notes and Canadian coinage and tokens. His contributions were recognized in 1978 when he received the prestigious Royal Canadian Mint Award.

This fall he will add still another credit to his numismatic writings as co-author of a standard catalog on obsolete U.S. paper currency.

"Striking Impressions" is available for $22 U.S., by mail order from The Royal Canadian Mint, P.O. Box 459, Station A, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada K1N 8V5.

In his numismatic investment guide, Don Kagin gives step-by-step guidelines on analyzing today's coin market.

This well-respected author earned the first doctorate in numismatics granted in the United States. He is president of Kagin's Numismatic Investment Corp., in addition to acting as consultant for banks and trust departments, money managers and financial planners.

As one of the nation's top numismatic investment advisers, Kagin helps readers prepare a complete rare coin investment portfolio tailored to their particular needs and financial capabilities. His guide gives a practical look into the economic future of rare coin investments. And if the past is any indication, coins will continue to have solid investment potential.

A thousand dollars in high-quality rare coins purchased in 1950 could be sold for $500,000 today. But hindsight does no good. What Kagin hopes to give readers is foresight and strategic methods for determining when to buy and sell.

From Prentice-Hall Inc., Kagin's book is priced at $24.95 hardbound and $9.95 in the paperback version.

New books published

AT MOTHER'S REQUEST — A True Story of Money, Murder and Betrayal: by Jonathan Coleman; Atheneum; 624 pages; $19.95. As Truman Capote proved with "In Cold Blood," the best murder mysteries are the true ones, in the hands of a good writer. And Coleman is just that. He's carved a first-rate crime story out of the murder of Franklin Bradshaw by his grandson at the instigation of the boy's mother who was Bradshaw's daughter. It's a complex tale of an aging miser (Bradshaw was one of Utah's wealthiest people) who, at 76, was determined to keep it all — regardless of the needs of his family. Drawing on scores of interviews, Coleman fleshes it out like a novel.

HERBS — A Complete Guide to the Cultivation and Use of Wild and Domesticated Herbs: by Ann Bonar; Macmillan; 144 pages; $14.95. Handsome, oversize book with splendid color layouts of scores of herbs and what they'll do for you. The dandelion, for instance: "All parts of considerable use in liver troubles, a good diuretic and tonic, also mild laxative; juice said to be effective in treating warts." Lemon verbena can be used as a "cosmetic to perfume water for bathing or washing, as a freshener for skin in soaps." Author also includes herb recipes and instructions on creating an herb garden.

PHOTO TIPS

By Holt Confer
Copley News Service

If you read any of the popular consumer photo magazines, chances are you've noticed the Pentax ads. They're usually just inside the front cover with a double-page spread.

I suppose, if you're a marketing person, that positioning says your company is aggressively trying to increase its market share. Most of the "inside the front cover" ads I've seen talk about the Pentax 35mm line, since that's the group of cameras most people will look at.

Not too many sometime picture takers or even fairly serious photographers will even bother looking at larger format cameras. I don't suppose you can blame them — generally camera size and cost go up in direct proportion. Then too, there's been a lot of talk about the convenience factors of 35mm — size, weight, ease of operation. And all that's true, no question about it.

However, if you're the kind of person who marches to a different drummer, maybe you should take a look at Pentax's new 645 camera.

First of all, before you rush out the door heading for the nearest Pentax dealer, let me caution you the 645 is not a camera you can take out of the store, load with film and begin using. No-sir-eee. You've got to sit down with the 645 manual for a few hours and get acquainted with this camera.

I get to try a lot of cameras during the course of a year, and this is probably one of the more complex units I've worked with. However, the good news is that the complexity is short-lived. Once you've taken the time to master the controls, the 645 really performs very well, and it has an excellent disposition.

I knew there was something to like about this unit almost as soon as I took it out of the box. The camera just felt good — it was comfortable to hold, although at 46-plus ounces without the lens, it could hardly be called lightweight. The 645 requires, as they say around Newport, a firm hand on the tiller.

I asked Pentax to send me an 80-160mm lens with the camera so I could take a wider range of photos than would have been possible with just a standard lens. Incidentally, with this (or any) medium-format camera, the standard lens is about 70 or 75mm, instead of the 50mm you find with a 35mm camera. So in 35mm terms, the zoom lens I had with my Pentax 645 was the approximate equivalent of a 55-100mm lens.

The 80-160mm zoom lens is a good-size hunk by itself — a tad over 35 ounces. Add the lens to the camera and you need to be prepared to hold 5 pounds. To its everlasting credit, though, the Pentax grip is solid as the proverbial rock and never gives even a hint that it won't carry the load.

The camera is totally electric/electronic. All the control information — ISO number, shutter speed, aperture, program mode (there are four program modes — fully automatic, aperture priority, shutter priority and manual), exposure number — are all digital readouts. The film is motor driven, either one frame at a time, or continuous if the action demands a series of exposures.

However, with 120 film and 15 exposures, it's possible to motor yourself out of ammunition in a hurry. If you like to take pictures with machine gun rapidity, then you might want to consider the camera back for the 645 that allows you to use 220 film for 30 frames per roll; or even better, the 70mm back with 90 frames per roll.

STAMPS

By Lea Blauvelt
Copley News Service

The U.S. Transportation series goes on. And on. An 8.3-cent stamp featuring an 1860 ambulance and a 4.9-cent stamp depicting an 1880s buckboard were used June 21 in Reno, Nev.

These stamps were the 22nd and 23rd in the series initiated in 1981 with the release of the 18-cent Surrey stamp. The 8.3-cent denomination represents the rate for third-class mail presorted to the carrier route.

The 4.9-cent denomination covers the rate for non-profit third-class mail presorted to the five-digit ZIP code.

The Ambulance stamp was designed by James Schleyer, while the Buckboard stamp was designed by William H. Bond.

Schleyer based his design on his pen-and-ink drawings from the blueprints for an 1864 patent granted to Edwin R. McKean, who made several improvements in field ambulances. The stamp features a standard "McKean" ambulance, with one canvas shade rolled up to reveal a water keg and attached hoses. The words "Ambulance 1860s" and "8.3 USA" appear in two lines of type at the top of the green single-color stamp.

The Buckboard design was rendered by Bond by the scratchboard process from a model he prepared. Prominent in the design are the vehicle's four large, spoked wheels.

Both stamps are being issued in coils of 500 and 3,000 stamps.

Sunglasses help prevent eye problems

By Lucretia Steiger
Copley News Service
Second of three parts

Sunglasses aren't just fashion accessories made famous by movie stars and gangsters. Properly treated, they can cut the amount of ultraviolet light entering the eyes and help prevent a number of eye problems including "nuclear cataracts."

Not all sunglasses on the market block ultraviolet light. If you don't know whether your sunglasses have this property or not, get them checked by an optometrist who has metering equipment that can check a lens' ultraviolet light-blocking properties.

"Ultraviolet light, or UV, has always been there, but our understanding of what it can do to the eye has been known only the last few years," said Dr. Randall Conrad, president of the San Diego County Optometric Society. "Sunglass manufacturers have picked up on this and now they're offering sunglasses which can absorb harmful UV rays."

Optometrist Dr. Martin Gellman of the University of California at San Diego Eye Center said that nuclear cataracts — a cataract is an eye disease in which the lens becomes opaque, causing partial or total blindness — can be caused by a lifetime accumulation of ultraviolet light entering the eye.

"Light goes into the eye and first hits the cornea, or the front of the eye," he said. "Thirty percent of all ultraviolet or infrared rays are absorbed there. But 40 to 50 percent of the ultraviolet light gets through and continues to hit the lens behind the pupil.

"The lens in time starts to lose clarity, and you have a cataract."

Other eye conditions such as macular degeneration, retinitis pigmentosa and night blindness also can be caused by exposure to the ultraviolet and infrared rays hidden in the visible light of the sun, the optometrists said. People with light-colored eyes have less pigment in the eyes to absorb the light coming in, so they may be more susceptible to cataracts.

"This means they get a sort of double dose from bright light and glare," Conrad said.

Over-the-counter sunglasses generally do not have ultraviolet light-blocking properties — check for accompanying tags by manufacturers. All glass and plastic lenses as well as contact lenses filter out a little of the ultraviolet light entering the eye, said Conrad, but even prescription sunglasses do not filter out enough harmful UV rays to prevent problems.

In fact, wearing non-ultraviolet-treated sunglasses "can become a negative factor in that the dark lenses cause the pupil to open even further, allowing even a higher exposure to ultraviolet light," Gellman said.

To get ultraviolet protection, sunglasses are coated with a chemical that blocks off this portion of the light. This can be done to either prescription or non-prescription lenses.

"UV protection is a coating just like any kind of color coating, and it's slightly yellow," Conrad said. "The yellowness bends the rays differently, and you can put any kind of a color on top of that."

Not all cataracts are caused by overexposure to ultraviolet light. Another kind, called "cortical cataract" occurs with time and age, Conrad said, and is more prevalent in people under 65 than is nuclear cataract. After 65, both cataracts occur at about the same rate.

Particularly at risk for nuclear cataracts are those who take medications for high blood pressure or heart disease, because those medicines cause a higher sensitivity to ultraviolet light. Also in the high-risk category is anyone who has had a cataract operation, in which the lens of the eye is removed and and replaced with a plastic replica. The natural lens absorbs ultraviolet light, and when it is gone, more ultraviolet light gets through to the retina, Conrad said.

Examples of ultraviolet-light filtering sunglasses are those in Superior Optical's "Young Protective Lens Series" and Corning Optic's Serengeti Drivers.

The best way to find out about ultraviolet protection, says Lori Sparks, owner of Sunglass City, a shop in San Diego that sells only sunglasses, is to "trust the company you're buying them from. There is no marking to look for in the glasses themselves, no

Q. What is a "plugged-up" tomcat?

Our neighbors' male cat died recently. The veterinarian told them the cat was plugged up and therefore could not urinate.

What causes a cat to become plugged up? Is there anything that can be done to treat or prevent the disease? We are hoping our cat will not become plugged up.

A. Another name for the "plugged-up" condition is feline urologic syndrome, by far the most common disorder affecting the urinary tract in male cats. The incidence of the disease is not any greater in neutered or castrated cats than in intact cats.

Young adult cats do seem more prone to be affected by FUS than do kittens or much older cats. Although FUS can occur in cats of any age, it is relatively rare in cats younger than 1 year and in cats older than 4 years. Young male cats between 1 and 3 years are most often affected.

The disease is more commonly seen during the winter and early spring months. The urethra, the tube carrying urine, is blocked or plugged by a pastelike, gritty or sandy material in cats with FUS. The plugs are composed primarily of mucous and various crystalline materials.

The exact cause of FUS is apparently complex and not fully understood. Urinary tract infection, diet and heredity apparently all play a role in its occurrence.

The higher incidence of FUS seen in inactive males during the winter might be due to decreased water intake, reduced frequency of urination, increased concentration of urine and the subsequent high rates of formation of urinary tract crystals. All cats should be given a constant source of fresh water.

Fifty percent to 70 percent of all affected cats have recurrences. This is probably due to damage and scarring of the urethra during each bout of the disease. However, if a cat has recurrences, a veterinarian can recommend specific feeding regimens or prescribe a commercial prescription diet for prevention of the disease.

Cats with FUS usually are restless, appear to be anxious, strain excessively while trying to urinate, and eventually lose their interest in normal activities such as grooming, playing and eating. Blood may be seen in the urine. Affected cats often appear to be constipated because of the excessive and frequent straining while urinating.

Although FUS is an extremely serious disease of male cats, only about 1 percent of all cats ever have the disease.

way to tell if they have protection. But most inexpensive pairs of sunglasses do not."

Probably the least expensive sunglass lens with ultraviolet protection would retail for around $16 for an optical quality lens, she said, such as one made and so marked by Ski-Optics.

Ultraviolet protection in sunglasses ranges from about 50 percent to 60 percent blockage of the harmful light (in some of the Polaroid brand lenses) to a lens made by Vuarnet that blocks 99.85 percent of the ultraviolet light.

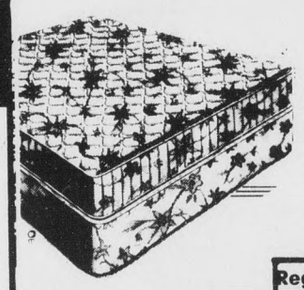

Other types of sunglass lenses include:

Polarized lenses help cut reflections and thus are good for skiers or fishermen faced with the glare of sun off snow or water. But unless they are specially treated, they will not absorb ultraviolet rays.

Polycarbonate lenses are made from a form of plastic used in space helmets to provide high-impact resistance and are a little lighter in weight than most sunglasses. They are considered to be a good sunglass for sports. Polycarbonate lenses can be made with ultraviolet light protection in them.

Photosensitive lenses, developed by Corning Optical in 1964, are of a special composition that darkens when exposed to sunlight and lightens as the sunlight fades. These also can be treated to resist ultraviolet light.

Upland Legion tourney field at dozen teams

The field is set for the 25th annual Upland Fourth of July American Legion baseball Tournament, despite having four teams drop out a week before the start of play.

A dozen teams will comprise the 1985 field that will battle for four days at Memorial Park in Upland and the Chaffey College campus in Rancho Cucamonga. The first game is scheduled for 5:30 p.m. Friday at Memorial Park between Rosemead, pne of four teams from outside District 25 in the field, and Montclair.

Manager Ray Baker's Upland squad will once again serve as the host squad for the long-running tourney. Upland will play District 25 rival San Bernardino Friday evening at 8 to cap the first day's play.

"We had four teams drop out at almost the last minute," Baker said. "Walnut, the 1983 champion, folded while Redlands Post 106 and Charter Oak had trouble filling the roster for the weekend.

"The defending champion, Fullerton Angels, pulled out for some reason," Baker said.

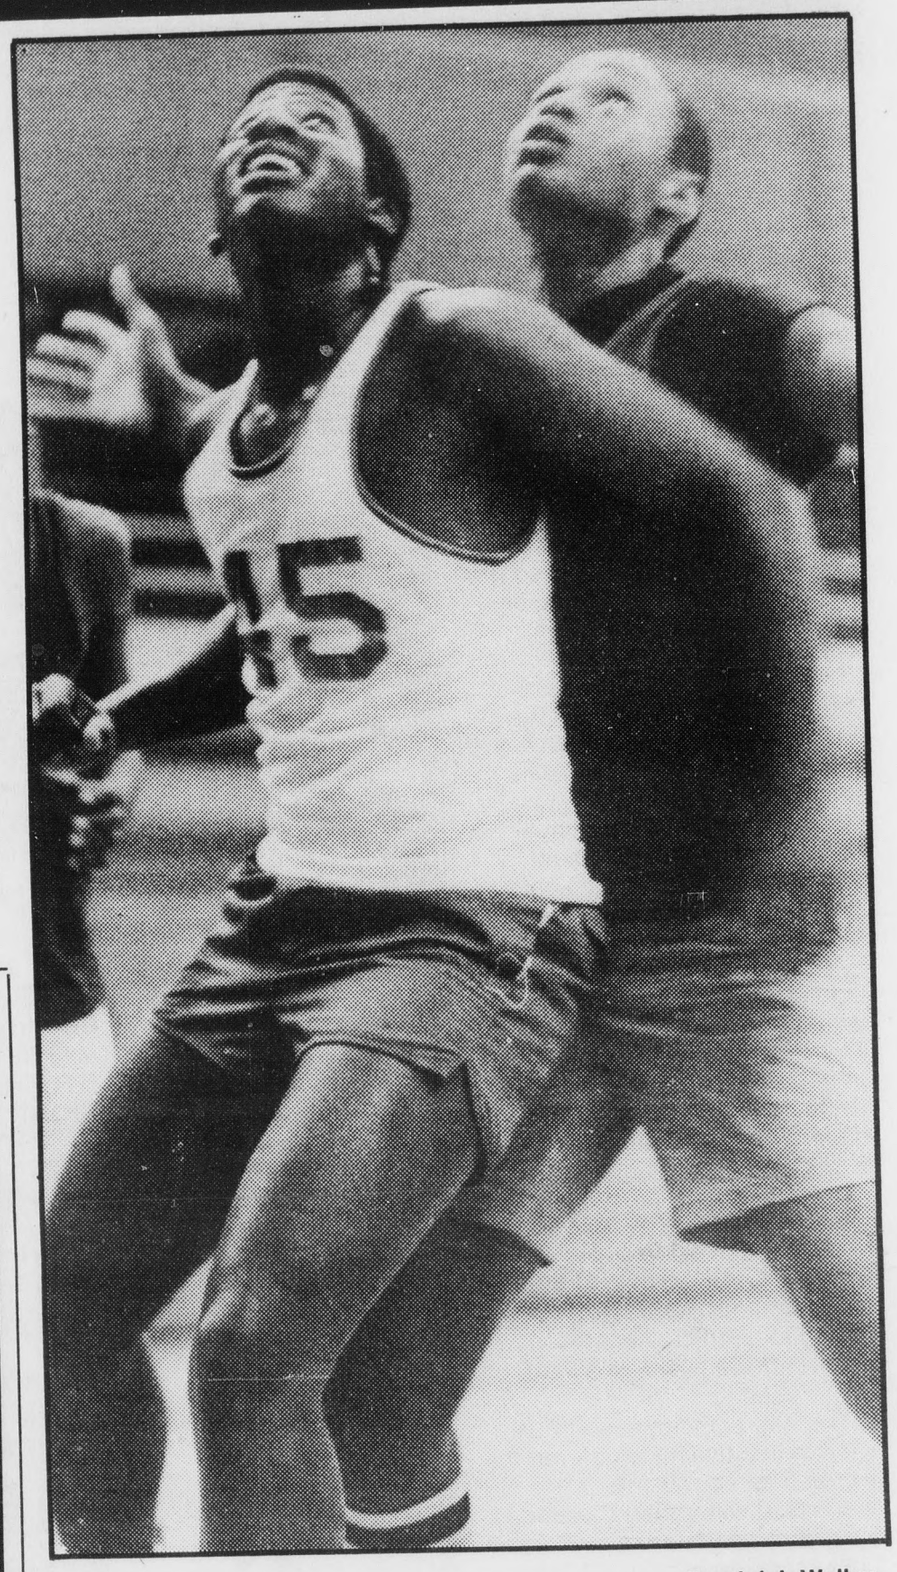

In addition to the four teams opening on Friday, other squads in the tournament include Chino, Corona, Ontario, Rancho Cucamonga and Redlands Post 650 from District 25 and outsiders Pomona and La Habra.

Saturday's schedule begins with four first round games. Chino and Corona meet at 10 a.m. at Memorial, followed by Pomona and Ontario. La Habra and Rancho Cucamonga meet at 10 a.m. at Chaffey Coillege, followed by the contest between El Monte and Redlands 650.

Also on Saturday, the consolation quarterfinals are scheduled for 3 and 5:30 p.m. at Memorial Park and 3 pm. at Chaffey College. Championship quarterfinal games are set for 5:30 p.m. at Chaffey College and 8 p.m. at Memorial.

Sunday's schedule is less crowded. A quarterfinal championship game opens the day's play at 1 p.m. at Memorial, followed by the consolation semifinal encounter at 4. The final game is the championship semifinal at 7:30.

The tourney's consolation title game is set for Monday at 5:30 at Memorial, followed by the championship game.

Rainbow Express wins title

It was a year to remember for members of the Upland Rainbow Express '71.

Coach John Schmelzle's team recently won six games in Boise, Idaho to capture the United States Youth Soccer Association Far West regional championship. The six wins capped the season's play and the Express finished with a 32-4-3 record.

The Far West region was comprised of 14 western states, including Hawaii.

"We played outstanding soccer," said Schmelzle, whose team opened with shutout victories over Washington (3-0), Utah (9-0),Montana (11-0) and Nevada (4-0) to reach the semifinals.

The Rainbow Express, featuring 12 girls from Upland, defeated Arizona to gain the finals and won the championship with a 2-1 victory over Washington.

"They were a very fine and tough team," Schmelzle said of the finals foe. "We just played a very consistent contest."

Chaffey College hosts summer cage league

Want to see next year's high school basketball players in action this summer? Then Chaffey College is the place to go.

Five weeks remain in the Chaffey College high school summer basketball league run under the direction of Jeff McCall, head basketball coach at Chaffey College. The league includes entries from Upland, Alta Loma, Ontario, Claremont, Montclair, Etiwanda, Chaffey and San Bernardino.

Four games are played each Friday night beginning at 5. It's a fast-paced game with four 10-minute running quarters, although the last two minutes of the second half is regular time if the point difference is under 10. Teams have a three-minute half-time.

Friday's schedule has Upland and San Bernardino opening at 5, followed by the Ontario/ Chaffet clash. Claremont and Montclair meet at 7, with Alta Loma and Etiwanda ending the day's play at 8.

R.C. advisory panel to prepare 'code of conduct'

By Patrick McGreevy
Staff Writer

A subcommittee has been formed by the Rancho Cucamonga Community Advisory Commission to determine how the commission should conduct itself in future.

The committee has been given a list of proposed rules to be incorporated into a "code of conduct" for the commission.

Commissioners' written suggestions for the code, including restrictions on members' criticisms of the city council, were turned over to the committee Thursday.

The code is aimed at preventing problems like the dispute that led to the recent explusion of Commissioner Phil Yenovkian by the council.

Yenovkian was removed from the commission May 3 for his criticism of the council over its handling of an issue in which a developer had removed 75 to 100 trees from Yenovkian's neighborhood.

At the time, Yenovkian said the residents of Rancho Cucamonga had "lost faith in city government."

The ideas for a "code of conduct" submitted by individual commissioners at the May 23 meeting included limitations on commissioners' authority to speak for the commission and a prohibition of personnal attacks or those that are primarily intended to embarrass the councilmembers.

Councilman Dick Dahl, one of four members who voted for Yenovkian's expulsion, said that he supports the code of ethics.

Different commissioner's view the commission's role differently. One suggested element of the "code of conduct" states that, for "Any remarks made at any planning, council or other meeting where a commissioner might be identified as such, you should state whether you are speaking as a commissioner or as a private citizen speaking on your own."

Another suggested element would state, "I perceive commissioners were appointed to represent the community and should be able to speak up if the segment of the community they represent wishes them to speak on a particular item which might be in conflict with the presiding city officials."

Some commissioners told the city staff that they would like a code that would encourage free expression of ideas, particularly unpopular ones, while at the same time not running afoul of the true decision-makers.

Other ideas for the code included;

- Make no public statements which would constitute a personal attack (as opposed to an attack on one or more issues) on council members, except during election campaigns.
- Always state whether you are speaking as a private citizen or a CAC member when addressing or writing a public body or dealing with news media.
- Do no act intended primarily to embarrass the city, its administration or its policy makers.
- Refrain from any commission or ommission which would expose the city to liability.
- Comply with common standards of public decency in all places your presence is likely to be regarded as serving a CAC function.

The commission's outgoing chairman, Jim Banks, said he thinks the commission wants some expression from the city council about the role and expected conduct of the commissioners.

"We are attempting to impose a code of conduct on ourselves but we want the council's approval," said Banks, who turned over the chair to Paul Saldana last Thursday.

Banks said he believes that membership on the commission should not restrict the individual's right to give his or her opinion as an individual citizen.

"Personally, my feeling is that the individuals who also are members of the commission should have great latitude in what they do and say as individuals," he said.

No alcohol sales in combination stores

New combination convenience-gas stores will not be able to sell alcohol, the Upland City Council recently decided.

The council two weeks ago objected to a provision allowing the sale of alcohol in a new city ordinance allowing for the facilities.

The council asked planning department staff to amend the proposal to exclude the sale of alcohol. The amended proposal was presented to the Upland board Monday.

Council members voted 4-0 in favor of the revised ordinance. Councilman Frank Hoover was absent.

The new 800-square-foot stores will be permitted in commercially zoned areas and can't be located within 400 feet of a residential neighborhood.

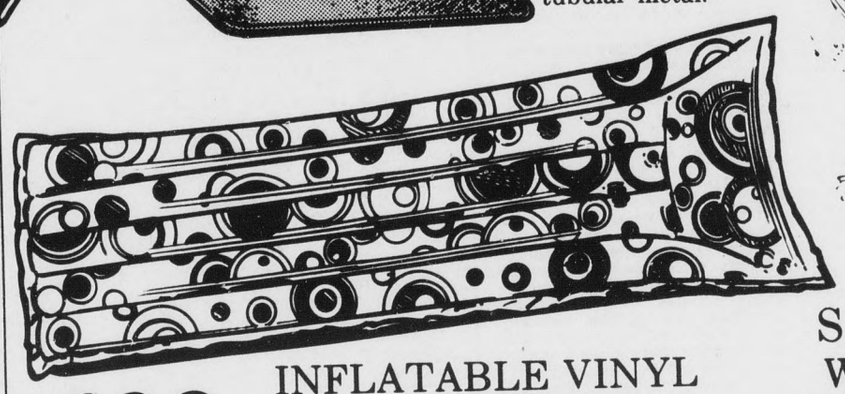

Upland is the last West Valley city to change its ordinances to allow the markets. All the other cities in the surrounding area allow the markets.

"SATISFACTION ALWAYS GUARANTEED"

Bear Gulch School wins award for design

The Bear Gulch Elementary School, with its bear-paw markings and village-like feel, has won a national design award for the Rancho Cucamonga architectural firm that designed the school.

The firm of Wolff, Lang, Christopher Architects, Inc. received awards for the Rancho Cucamonga school and the Pomona Vocationa Center in annual competition sponsored by the American Association of School Administrators and the American Institute of Architects.

The firm's two projects were the only two projects from California honored in this year's competition and the firm was the only California winner of an award this year.

Apple crisp has a new look and fresher taste today.

Apple crisp fast and easy to prepare

Homey apple crisp has come of age with the new American cooking. It's faster and easier to make, fresher in flavor and may even be lower in calories. Although, that depends on how much you eat!

In this new version, the flavored cream goes onto the plate first. It's almost an upside-down version of the traditional one. Over the cream go lightly sauteed apples and a crunchy almond granola topping that doesn't have to be baked. It's simply tossed with a simmered butter and brown sugar mixture to give it the rich crumbly texture we recall from childhood.

Nor is this new version lacking in nutrition. Fresh apples and nutrient rich granola team with the protein, Vitamin E, riboflavin, magnesium and phosphorous of the almonds to make this as hearty and healthy as grandmother's was.

Elegant Apple Crisp

1 cup cinnamon granola, broken up
½ cup toasted slivered almonds
¼ cup butter plus 2 tablespoons
2 tablespoons brown sugar
1½ teaspoons cinnamon
1 cup whipping cream
2 tablespoons powdered sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
½ teaspoon mace
¼ teaspoon almond extract
2 Pippin apples

Combine granola and almonds. Simmer ¼ cup butter with brown sugar and cinnamon five minutes; cool slightly. Toss with almond mixture. Blend heavy cream with powdered sugar, vanilla, mace and almond extract; heat gently. Peel and core apples. Slice paper thin and saute in remaining 2 tablespoons butter. To serve, pour ¼ cup cream mixture into each plate; top with apples and ¼ cup almond mixture. Pass remaining almond mixture at table. Makes 4 servings.
